

©Jan Sjöholm October-16-2003

Autumn

October 16 2003

It has been some sad nights.

No, no one have died and no one is sick

The air has been brisk and clear.

The weather has been wonderful.

The moon have been..... bewitching....

But still, its like I got an iron grip around my heart.

Sadness will follow.

Just because of the chill.

No, it's not just the chill.

Freezing, it has been freezing.

Soon the leafs will leave the trees,

leaving the grey branches naked against the skies.

No, I know, the dead leafs are not wasted.

They will rejoin the earth,

giving back it's minerals,

giving the collected sun energy to other organisms and finally become parts of other trees and plants.

But still, ....

the falling leafs will take away something for me.

I love the autumn.

It's my time of the year.

At least until it starts freezing.

Then I want to do as the bears.

Seek a shelter for the winter and just sleep it off.

But I can't.

I will have to put some more wood at the fireplace.

That of course will give me some relief,

as I dream of the next autumn.

Dream of the next slow motion explosion.

It's an explosion of colours and smells that I love.

How I will miss the driving and walking in the colourful autumn.

I will miss it next year too.

After the first freezing nights....